

For nearly 80 years, the Jimmie Hale Mission has been at the heart of serving the homeless and addicted in Birmingham. While the primary focus of the organization has remained unaltered through the years, the clientele it serves and its approach to recovery have been adapted to provide the most effective programs to even more individuals at NO COST.

The Mission's Royal Pines center for men in Hayden, Alabama, opened its doors in 1995. This beautiful 75-acre facility offers a distraction-free environment accessible by more individuals in the north-central part of the state. In addition to being the birth place of the organization's revolutionary Active Recovery program, a partnership with Wallace State Community College in Hanceville makes it an ideal location for men working toward a brighter future through secondary education.

Just three years later, the organization began offering its services to women and children through Jessie's Place. This downtown center helps clients overcome the challenges that prevent healthy, safe, and bright futures through its Life Recovery program. The Mission is currently developing plans to both expand capacity and implement the Active Recovery curriculum in the near future as the demand for addiction recovery services for women continues to grow in the city and throughout the country.

Client and community response to Active Recovery has been so overwhelming that the program was integrated into the men's center downtown in 2020. Over the last two years, graduation numbers have soared. As a result, more clients are reuniting with their families, finding living-wage employment, embracing lasting sobriety, and overcoming homelessness.

The figures in this annual report reflect just a glimpse of the true impact being made in our community thanks to the incredible generosity of our partners.
